Massive manhunt in cop killing

LAKEWOOD SUSPECT WAS ALREADY WANTED ON A WEAPONS CHARGE

A New Jersey state trooper prepares his dog in front of the Lakewood municipal building before continuing the search for the suspect in the killing of Lakewood police officer Christopher Matlosz.

The teenager accused of brazenly executing a Lakewood police officer in his patrol car Friday has been wanted by authorities since late last month, when he was charged with illegal possession of a rifle and hollow-point bullets, officials said yesterday.

Jahmell Crookam, 19, the subject of a massive, all-hands dragnet involving law enforcement officers from across the state, was named in an arrest warrant on the weapons counts Dec. 29, Ocean County Prosecutor Marlene Lynch Ford said.

It remained unclear yesterday whether Officer Christopher Matlosz knew of the open warrant Friday afternoon. It was just after 4 p.m. when Matlosz pulled alongside Crookam as the teen walked on a residential street and began what witnesses described as a calm, nonconfrontational conversation.

Moments later, authorities said, Crookam whipped out a handgun and shot the 27-year-old officer three times at point-blank range. Matlosz, a Lakewood police officer since 2006, was pronounced dead less than an hour later.

Police continued a fevered manhunt for Crookam yesterday, going door-to-door and arresting dozens of people on outstanding warrants in an attempt to shake loose information about the teen, who goes by the street name "Sav," short for Savage.

A law enforcement helicopter made continued sweeps over the Golfview Terrace townhouse complex, not far from the scene of the shooting on August Drive. Officers

Grandfather helped give Jets' kicker his heart

From his living room in Palos Verdes Estates, Calif., the old man watched the field-goal kicker mark off his steps and then blast it through the posts to turn Lucas Oil Stadium into a tomb a week ago last night.

The thing that struck Quentin Stiles at that time was not that his grandson was an instant, authentic New York sports hero, or the man of the moment in the NFL.

What impressed him most was that the woman seated beside him was "going absolutely crazy," he recalled with a laugh.

So Stiles looked impassively at his wife, Claire, and casually remarked, "What do you expect from the ice man? We knew Nick was going to make that."

Nick Folk agrees with all that, but adds this coda: The field goal that demolished Indianapolis was the culmination of a once-struggling kicker's education — one based largely on the eloquence of his grandfather's example.

The thing is, Quentin Stiles, 81, is no ordinary grandfather, and Folk doesn't come from an ordinary family.

Indeed, this is no ordinary time for Folk, the Jets kicker who went from shaky job status a month ago to a guy who got yucks on Late Night With Jimmy Fallon after drilling the 32-yard game-winner that delivered the Jets to Foxborough, Mass., today.

"You have to embrace that kind of pressure," Folk said. "That's the thing I learned from my grandfather: Nothing is too big. If you really want to do something special — you give yourself over to the opportunity."

"He was that way. He retired when I was young, but I know he loved his work. He enjoyed his own way of performing under the same strain and duress. He said it made him a better person, and I learned that from him."

Stiles was a world-class thoracic surgeon, and a pioneer in heart bypass surgery. He literally wrote the book on the practice in 1976 ("Myocardial

IT STILL STINKS

THE PASSAIC VALLEY SEWERAGE COMMISSIONERS, despite Gov. Christie's promise of reform, remains rife with nepotism and no-bid contracts for insiders, records reveal.

By Ted Sherman
STAR-LEDGER STAFF

Most people have never heard of the Passaic Valley Sewerage Commissioners, an obscure public agency that serves more than 1.5 million people across four counties of northern New Jersey.

It doesn't sound all that glamorous, and to enter its gates seems like a dark visit to Hades — one that begins with a row of ancient-looking, slow-turning Archimedes screw pumps working endlessly on a turbulent river of waste.

For some, though, it is a river of gold.

As government agencies and municipalities tighten their belts, laying off cops, teachers, garbage collectors and firefighters to avoid going broke, Passaic Valley remains an island of job security for the connected, their families and their friends, a new analysis of records and public documents by The Star-Ledger shows.

Its $46.4 million payroll includes spouses and children of commissioners, mayors, friends of mayors and the brother-in-law of a mayor who is also a commissioner, the documents show. The median salary there has jumped by nearly 30 percent over the past five years.

Questions about how Passaic Valley spends public money are not new. Assemblyman Gordon Johnson (D-Bergen) once famously described the PVSC's budget as "an awful lot of money to push people through a pipe."

WHAT IS THE PASSAIC VALLEY SEWERAGE COMMISSIONERS?

Created by a special act of the Legislature in 1902, the Passaic Valley Sewerage Commissioners operate one of the largest treatment plants in the country handling everything that can be flushed or dumped down the drain within its 48 member municipalities in Passaic, Bergen, Essex, and Hudson counties, including Newark and Jersey City. That's about 330 million gallons per day, or about a fourth of all the wastewater generated in New Jersey; even more when it rains.

Overseen by a nine-member board, it has two representatives from each county it serves and one at-large member all appointed by the governor.

Unlike with most other public authorities in New Jersey, the governor cannot veto a decision or directly challenge an action by the PVSC, whose costs are picked up by member communities.

An earlier examination of the pay by The Star-Ledger in 2005 found its payroll swollen with the friends and family of those with political clout, while records showed the funneling of thousands of dollars in no-bid contracts to political insiders.

And last year, Gov. Chris Christie put Passaic Valley on his hit list as incoming governor, calling the agency's hiring practices "completely outrageous."

But new documents released under a series of public records requests paint a picture of an entrenched agency that has changed little, and they explore areas of the operation not previously brought to light.

At least 85 of Passaic Valley's 567 employees make more than $100,000. Those are paid more than $200,000 — among them, a former aide to an influential Democratic congressman who earns $220,443 and was given the keys to a new Ford Expedition to take home.

The documents show the commissioners routinely hire friends and family and those with ties to elected officials. A record of those hires is kept in what is known as the "commissioners' rounds" — a document that officials denied existed until it was specifically requested by name. The rounds are numbered, not unlike NFL draft rounds, keeping score over who gets the next hire. One
